- North and Central Florida: Strengthening onshore flow behind a cold front will push scattered showers over the Atlantic toward the coast. Periods of light to moderate rain will accompany the showers as they move onshore. Considerable cloud cover will keep temperatures closer to their mid-October average this afternoon, with highs near 80 along the coast and 83-86 further inland.
- South Florida: Isolated to scattered showers with a possibility of a thunderstorm will continue to develop over the Atlantic waters and move slowly south southwest. A few of the showers could even work into the metro areas of South Florida before dissipating which could produce rainfall amounts up to a tenth of an inch.
