CURRENT SITUATION/ WEATHER SUMMARY:

Invest 99L will continue to move north through tomorrow morning, bringing increasing rain chances to the northern half of the Peninsula today. Scattered showers are already occurring in South Florida and the Keys this morning and will gradually push north into portions of Central Florida today. Forecast rainfall amounts through tomorrow morning are not expected to exceed an inch, but locally heavier amounts are possible, especially along the East Coast and in South Florida and the Keys. A Flood Watch has been issued for Lee County through Sunday evening, and additional flood watches could be issued today. Some thunderstorms may develop as well and may produce occasional lightning and gusty winds. Skies in Central and South Florida will otherwise be partly to mostly cloudy through tomorrow morning. North Florida should remain dry over the next 24 hours, but isolated showers and storms are possible in Northeast Florida. Mostly sunny to partly cloudy skies are expected in North Florida today, and mostly clear skies are expected there overnight. Highs will be in the mid to upper 80s in rain-cooled South Florida and in the lower to mid 90s elsewhere; heat index values in the upper 90s to near 100 are expected throughout the Peninsula. Lows tonight will be in the lower 70s in North Florida, in the mid to upper 70s in Central and South Florida, and near 80 in the Keys.

There is a moderate to high risk for rip currents at all East Coast beaches today due to lingering swells causing wave heights up to 3 or 4 feet. Minor to major river flooding continues throughout the Peninsula. A Coastal Flood Advisory remains in effect for the St. Johns River and its tributaries through at least through Friday evening. Tides will run around 1 foot above normal. Many rivers remain in minor to major flood stage, and many rivers are still under River Flood Warnings.

Invest 99L is expected to move north toward the western half of the Florida Peninsula through tomorrow morning. A weak area of low pressure is expected to form off the Florida West Coast this weekend, but significant development of this system is not anticipated. It has a 40% (medium) chance of development over the next 48 hour
